moving cloud. The party drew out over the long hours as individuals and small groups found the sleepwalking pace that suited them best. In the early hours of the morning tired eyes began to play tricks. I well remember peering through the darkness at houses by the roadside, which, on closer approach, resolved into sticks leaning against trees. A few of the night marchers dropped out to snatch a couple of hours' sleep by the wayside. The rest plodded on, not feeling, not thinking, just staring ahead into the darkness until the grey dawn light shining on the white rails of the Barkly bridge indicated the end of the trail.

Breakfast at sunrise, then a few hours' welcome sleep, and the trip was over except for the ride home, and, of course, the talking, which continues to this day, breaking out afresh whenever the "Night Marchers of the Bull Plain" foregather.

and swirling mist, en route, so we thought, for the Nobs. The illusion was rudely shattered when, having dropped below the level of the mountain mists, we saw the ridge ahead descending into the dark green depths of the upper Jamieson Valley. Wilting under the sullen stares of the sodden sufferers, the leader and an accomplice retraced the route along the ridge to find that the Main Divide diverged southward but a short distance from our previous night's camp-site. Back to the top the weary wanderers plodded in worsening weather, then down again along a ridge (the right one this time), heading for the Nobs. As the Nobs loomed out of the mists, driving rain turned to vicious sleet. The wind increased in violence until one member, somewhat lacking in ballast, was, after a stumble, blown off his feet and down the steep slope below. A lurid torrent of fluent Scot's cursing indicated that the victim, although entangled in the folds of his ground-sheet, was still very much alive. Fortunately he was not hurt, apart from a few bruises.

We left the Divide at the Nobs, to head southward toward the Bull Plain Spur, and ultimately Glencairn and the Barkly River. With decreasing altitude the windswept-going of the open tops was exchanged for welcome shelter among timber, and before long the northern extremity of a forestry jeep track was reached. At Grime's Saddle, a few miles south of the Nobs, we halted to examine the situation. Dusk was now approaching and our bus was to be met at noon the following day at the Barkly River bridge, three miles south of Glencairn and twenty-two miles from our present position. The way ahead lay first along a jeep track, and then a timber road, and since navigation presented few problems it was decided that we would walk through the night. First we had a meal and the warmth of a good fire. In the clearing of the jeep track, large quantities of brushwood and saplings had been uprooted and pushed aside. Willing hands piled this material into a heap and soon flames rose high into the black night as eager hands threw on more and yet more fuel. Descending rain seemed to vaporise and billies standing several feet from the fire bubbled merrily. For a pleasant two hours warmth flowed into previously frozen bodies and spirits rose.

Unfortunately, all good things must come to an end. Eventually the fire died and the time came to depart. Having no torches, we groped and stumbled along the narrow forest-flanked jeep track in a many-eyed but three-quarters blind "crocodile", until the road, encountered at the Basalt Knob Mountain Ash Top Saddle, provided better going. As the night wore on the weather improved and some illumination was provided by the moon as it shone fitfully through gaps in the fast-hours of Friday morning, some six miles short of our destination. At long last the road junction came into view and we plodded on up the jeep track, to bed down in the Mount Skene fire-watchers' hut at 4 a.m.

Dawn came all too soon, revealing leaden skies from which snow-flakes fluttered down to join the inch-thick carpet of white, fresh-fallen on the ground - not an encouraging sight. It is a credit to the persuasive powers of the leader that all members of the party were packed and away by 9 a.m. After a quick visit to the summit of Mount Skene, we descended a steep track to join a logging road running north along the Main Divide, in the direction of Mount Sunday. As we walked on, the skies cleared a little and our step quickened. Prospects looked good despite a chilly wind. We soon reached the end of the road, and continued north, halting for lunch above a deep gap which appears on the map as Peter's Gorge. In the distance, still a long way off, was our proposed camp-site, the Low Saddle, a gigantic gap in the Divide between Mount Sunday and Mount Macdonald. At this juncture one member consulted a small crystal ball which he always carried in case of emergency, and decided to retreat in favour of a more leisurely Easter.

We continued on, now twelve in number. Lack of sleep and a few cases of unfitness slowed the pace during the afternoon and it soon became apparent that the Low Saddle was not to be reached that night. Darkness overtook us on the ridge leading to Mount Sunday and here was established dry camp Number One.

The morning of Saturday was cloudy and cold, but without rain. We were up at dawn and away for the Low Saddle like horses scenting water. The first arrivals downed packs, took up billies and waterbags and headed down a long gully running to the north. The search was long as a consequence of the preceding dry summer, and an hour elapsed before the water party returned bearing the precious fluid. After a combined breakfast and lunch, we set off, with full water-bottles, on the steady 3,000 feet climb toward the triple peaks of Mount Macdonald, which were reached after a long uphill grind. We paused briefly in the chill wind to admire the view from the 5,333 feet top of the mountain, before hurrying on in the now late afternoon to establish a second dry camp some distance east of the summit.

During the night, water rationing came to a sudden end. Rain - buckets of it - poured down in drenching torrents. At breakfast a billy could be filled from the run-off down the smooth trunks of the snow-gums. Camp was struck and we continued east along the ridge in rain suitcase while he struggled to ski up the road from Harrierville to the Hospice. He was a quick learner, however and soon took his place amongst the pioneer skiers. He joined Eddie Robinson and four others in 1926 in the first E.-W. winter crossing of the Bogong High Plains and in 1927 he joined E. Robinson, E. Stewart and W. Waters in the first W.-E. crossing. With the same companions in 1928 he made the first winter ascent of Mt Bogong. His winters were regularly spent at Mt Hotham and for four years (1931-1934) he was editor of the Victorian Ski Year Book, and in 1933 became the editor of the Victorian section of the Australian and New Zealand Ski Year Book. Kemble had become one of the states most experienced and respected skiers.

However, although no records exist of his summer wanderings, Kemble claimed to have climbed every worthwhile Victorian mountain and he is known to have spent a considerable amount of time in the Sheepyard Flat-Howqua River area. He is remembered for his naming of the top of the McLaughlin's Spur climb from the Delatite River to the final approach to Mt Buller - "Thank Christ Corner", a name which persisted on bushwalker's maps until the Buller Ski Village Development made the route redundant.

'Kem' was a member of the Melbourne Walking Club for sixty years.

All Through the Night

From The Melbourne Walker, Vol 40, 1969, pp. 75-76:

By R. Williams

As time goes by, details of past walks blur into a pleasant background of recollections against which are highlighted those incidents and events which were pleasant, exciting, or arduous enough to have left a clear and permanent record on the mind. Sometimes, however, a whole trip remains in bold relief. The Melbourne Walking Club's Easter walk of 1960 is a case in point. The story of this trip, commonly referred to as the "Easter Death March", has oft been recounted around the campfire, but now that the ranks of first-hand retellers are thinning, it is perhaps time to establish the written record.

The outing began innocently enough. We travelled by train to Heyfield on the Thursday evening preceding Easter, and there boarded a bus for the long drive to the Mount Skene Road junction. The more perceptive of those present perhaps recognized an omen in the fruitless hour-long wait at Heyfield for a late-comer; however, the first real sign that this was no ordinary trip came when a large tree across the road forced us to disembark and shoulder packs in the small

- An Easy/Medium walk of approx 12km.

Afternoon tea will be provided at the conclusion of the walk.

Medium/Hard Walk (13km): Willimigongon Creek-Days Picnic Ground. Leader Jenny Hosking

Requires a car shuffle to start of the walk in Mt Macedon Road near Anzac Road. We walk up the winding Anzac Road to the start of Moola track, Zig Zag track and continue to Days Picnic Ground via Sanatorium Lake. On the return we follow Hemphill's track, Mt Towrong and a fairly steep rocky track which descends to Anzac Road. Walking poles recommended.

Easy/Medium Walk (12km): Memorial Cross-Days Picnic Ground. Leader Terry Simpson

The walk starts at the end of Cameron drive in the car park close to the Top of the Range Tea Rooms. It is an easy to moderate walk, 12km. The track meanders through the trees and in places is a little rocky. Walking poles would be useful. It is an interesting and peaceful walk, with some lovely views. Along the way, there are two escape points at the Cameron picnic ground and McGregor's picnic ground for those who want to exit the walk. We will stop at Days Picnic ground for lunch where there are toilets and tables. We return via the same route back to the car park near the Top of the Range Tea Rooms and the Memorial Cross.
